The Problem

- One in five women is sexually assaulted in college\(^1\)

- 152 students sought support from the Victim Advocate Program for sexual assault, relationship/domestic violence, and stalking victimization in 2014

- 1.9% of FSU students reported experiencing penetration without their consent in the past 12 months\(^2\)
Role of Faculty & Staff

- Keepers of culture
- Norm setting
  - Violence won’t be tolerated
  - Everyone on this campus is expected to play a role
Culture Change

- If we are going to reduce the number of those being hurt by stalking, partner violence and sexual assault- there has to be a culture change.

Identifying Red Dots

- Group brainstorm
Obstacles

- It can be hard to do green dots when you see a red dot – even when you want to.

- What obstacles do you have?
Ways to be a (Reactive) Green Dot

- Direct: do something yourself
- Delegate: if you can’t do something yourself because of your obstacles, ask friends to help.
- Distract: if you don’t want to address the situation directly or acknowledge you see it, try to think of a distraction that will diffuse the situation or calm things down in the moment.
Reactive Green Dots

Telling a student you notice, you care, and pointing them to resources.

What is a (Proactive) Green Dot?

- Proactive Green Dots are things we can do to begin stopping red dots before they even start.

- The important thing is not necessarily what you do— but that you do something!

- There are always ways you can get involved in doing green dots.

What will your Green Dot be?

I always wondered why somebody didn't do something about that, then I realized I AM SOMEBODY!
